Manager of Patent And Trademark, U.S.A

Re.: Misuse of my Invention in Canada

Dear Sir,

To mail my documents for Patent, I referred to the Post Offices in Canada. In two cases the officer in charge did not perform her legal duties, for special delivery did not scan the envelope and not sealed the envelope . Day after I realized that they should do so. As a result I referred to the Chief and notified him that the employee in charge was interested to see my documents and wrongly told me saying that she scanned and sealed my envelope after I left the Post Office.

For your information, Post Offices in Canada are run by the private sector. They do not have sense of responsibility as Government employees.

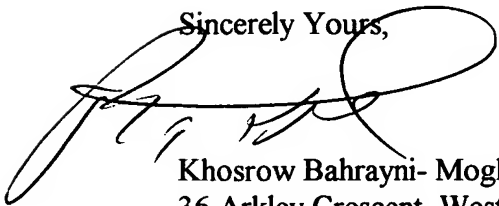

My first letter to Patent Office of the U.S. lost as I explained (photocopy no. 1) . On November 15, 2001 I mailed another envelope. To receive a Patent in Canada, I realized that another person has submitted an application for Patent similar to mine. As it was received at a later date, it was not accepted. As a result the Patent will be issued in my name. .

I am worried about my documents in the U.S. Please let me know if another person has submitted the same application for Patent, in order I can follow up the case through RCMP or possibly FBI.

In case you receive my second envelop and you issue a Patent to my name, I shall have no worry.

A new application together with money order is attached to this letter.

Sincerely Yours,

Khosrow Bahrayni- Moghadam

We appreciate your confidence in International Technology Exchange and are pleased to have the opportunity to review your product idea. This report has been prepared by a team of industry professionals, marketing experts, product design specialists, and university talent. We are confident that you will find it to be both a thorough review of your product concept and to have been executed in a realistic and balanced fashion.

The statistical references in this report are based on the most recently available data. Much of it comes from government publications and databases as well as research reports created for the commercial market. In many instances, however, the process of assembling, analysing, and distributing this information entails a considerable amount of time and effort. Thus, many of the final figures for the prior year are not yet available. In some cases the most recently published figures are two or three years old. Overall, though, our goal in this report is to address trends in the marketplace that might affect the introduction of the product. Industry categories rarely exhibit major changes within one or two years. Thus, we are confident that the references cited in this report are sufficiently relevant for this purpose.

This report contains information that is both product-specific regarding the concept under consideration and process-specific relating to the overall issues relevant to the development, patenting, and marketing of any new product. This process is, in many respects, universal and exhibits few, if indeed any, variations from one product to another. As such, we have included generic information in this report that addresses this process along with those sections of the report that specifically address the issues relevant to the product under consideration.

We should also point out early on that the introduction of a new product to the marketplace is typically a long term venture with a considerable risk factor. This is equally true for large, sophisticated corporations, mid-sized manufacturing concerns, small owner-operated businesses, and independent inventors. For example, 3M, a company that thrives on innovation, generates thousands of new product concepts, few of which ever become success stories. Patent statistics further illustrate this as historically less than one percent of patents result in profitable returns. ITE cannot forecast whether an idea will be commercially successful as new products succeed or fail for a wide range of reasons, many of which are highly unpredictable.
